Matthew F. Maury.
 To the editor of the N. Y. Evening Post:
 Sir: In the New York Tribune recently appeared a letter from Mr. Julius A. Palmer, Jr., of Boston, calling attention to the scant recognition as yet accorded by the government to the services of Maury, and urging the erection of a national monument at Washington to his memory. Mr. Palmer justly associates the name of Maury with that of Columbus, declaring that "the work of the latter is just as valuable to an endless posterity as were the discoveries of the former to the people of the last 400 years," and thinks it most appropriate that the corner-stone of such a monument as he proposes should be laid during the celebration in 1892 of the discovery of America. This prophet, he goes on to show, has not been without honor save in his own country, and the reason is briefly cited. Maury espoused the cause of his native South in the late war, but this is no reason why the great and reunited country to which, after all, he belongs as much as he ever did should decline to claim him. As we might the English monarchist of to day refuse to honor the memory of Hampden or of Milton, or the English churchman to respect that of Wesley or Whitfield.
 The letter of Mr. Palmer incidentally suggests another way in which more promptly and yet most happily the name of Maury might be honored by the Government.
 Among the eminent Americans whose services to mankind have been acknowledged in Europe, perhaps not one ever received as many marks of distinction as our great meteorologist. This recognition was as prompt as it was generous, and, thanks to sectional passion and prejudice, his reputation as a man of science and a public benefactor is to day wider and better established in the Old World than in this. In the years 1855, 1856, and 1857 Maury was the recipient of gold medals from the sovereigns of France, Austria, Prussia, Norway and Sweden, Belgium, Holland, Sardinia and Bremen; of a medal from the Prince Consort of England; of the great Humboldt gold medal from Berlin; of the decoration of the Royal Order of the Dannebrog from the King of Denmark; of that of the Tower and Sword from the King of Portugal, and of St. Ann of Russia from the Czar; of a case containing a complete set, from Pope Pius IX., of all the medals struck during his Pontificate; of more than twenty diplomas of membership in foreign scientific societies; and, in addition to other testimonials, decorations and jewels of less note; the grand cross of the Legion of Honor from Napoleon III., and the decoration of St. Leopold from the King of Belgium.
 These medals, decorations, and jewels—except the last two, which were returned after his death—thirty or more in number, are now in the hands of the family, and, though all shown in the exposition in Richmond in 1888, have different owners, and cannot long be kept together. They should as a matter of national concern, undoubtedly be so kept. Let Congress, therefore, purchase and deposit them in the National Museum at Washington as a testimony to coming generations of the recognition by the countries of Europe of the genius of an American discoverer. Such an opportunity of perpetuating the fame of an eminent citizen is rare enough, in all conscience, to prevent an appropriation of this character from being a troublesome precedent, and we should be proud and happy to avail ourselves of it.
L. M. BLACKFORD,
 Alexandria, Va., July 27, 1889.

NEW PROCESS OF SUGAR REFINING.—The first lignite sugar refinery in this country is about to be put into operation, and if it carries out the expectations of its projectors it may revolutionize the sugar industries of the world. The Keystone Sugar Refining Company of Philadelphia has established a plant at Riverside, near Wilmington, and in a few days the machinery will be put in motion. The scheme is to utilize the waste from the molasses-houses known as "black strap" and turn out an excellent grade of sugar. The process is the invention of a man named Kleeman, a German, who has superintended the erection of the machinery at the Riverside refinery. He has one or two large refineries in Germany, which at present are the only ones in the world.

Notwithstanding the recent decision of Solicitor Hepburn adverse to the importation of the foreign professors engaged by Bishop Keane last winter for the Catholic University at Washington, those gentlemen will come to this country and take the places for which they are intended.
